U.S. Senate seeks to improve air quality

By CINDY HARTLEY
cindy@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Efforts to improve air quality in the Salt Lake Valley took a giant stride last week as legislation was introduced in the U.S. Senate to promote the use of low-emission alternative fuels for vehicles, an act co-sponsored by Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah.

The Alternative Fuels Promotion Act would offer a 50-cent-per-gallon tax break for the purchase of alternative fuels such as hydrogen, methanol or natural gas, and would provide a 10 percent tax credit, up to $4,000, for the purchase of a vehicle designed to run on alternative fuels.

The credit would also include a $5,000 break on the purchase of an electrically powered vehicle, and an additional $100,000 credit would be provided for a company willing to design infrastructure, which would further facilitate use of these vehicles.

The Environmental Protection Agency said about 50 percent of the vehicles on the road are sport utility vehicles, which pollute 3 to 5 times more than cars. The EPA also reports the number of miles traveled nationally by cars is up 127 percent.

According to Vaughn Whatley, a spokesman for the EPA, more and more studies are centered on vehicles which produce little or no emissions.

Although alternative fuel vehicles are efficient, require low maintenance and even offer new tax incentives, they are hard to find and even harder to accommodate.

Pat Mullaly, a sales manager for Mark Miller Toyota in Salt Lake City, said the store does not carry vehicles that run on alternative fuels because there is no demand for them.

"I think people are apathetic and don't want change," he said.

But even Norm Reese Honda in Calif., the biggest dealer in the country, said the fuel doesn't seem to be readily available, and if there was some kind of incentive to buy alternative fuel vehicles people might be more interested.

One Honda dealer in California that does carry alternative fuel vehicles is not advertising them for retail sale. Its target is to try and go after the private fleet business.

Converters can be purchased for cars which give the option of using either regular gas or propane, which is a cleaner burning fuel, but they are costly, ranging from $1500 to $2,000.

What are more common are cars designed to run on hybrid fuels, which burn cleaner than regular gasoline.

"Manufacturers are going more towards hybrid cars, which have the capability to get 60 to 80 miles per gallon. There's not much demand for alternative fuels," said Mike Sorensen, a service technician at Mark Miller Toyota.

Rick Sprott of the Department of Health's Division of Air Quality said reformed gasolines are more like the medicine you take to treat a specific problem. They have previously been mandated in Utah County when emission levels were too high, and helped lower pollutant levels.

A spokesperson for Questar Natural Gas, Curt Burnett, said there is a lot of interest in hybrid vehicles which initially run on natural gas, but start to generate electricity once the engine is running.

Electric cars are costly right now, but once technology improves, they have the potential to dramatically reduce exhaust emissions.

J.J. Brown, Hatch's legislative aid for natural resources and the environment, said he has been in these cars and they work great, but right now they're just too costly.

Much still needs to be done for these models to become practical to the average consumer, and it may take a while. Honda dropped the model it was working on this year because the company couldn't figure out how to bring costs down, Brown said.

Typically, cars which run on alternative fuels cost $4,000-$5,000 more than a comparable model which runs on gasoline, but the tax incentive Hatch proposed would compensate for this difference.

An additional $100,000 tax credit is available to help any company that wants to construct facilities which would accommodate alternative fuels.

Brown said the legislation is a three-pronged approach which targets the costs of these cars, alternative fuels and the infrastructure needed to facilitate them.

Stacy Charlesworth/ Daily Universe

A Provo resident fills up at a Crest gas station on 900 East in Provo. An act co-sponsored by Sen. Orrin Hatch was introduced in the U.S. Senate last week that promotes the use of low-emission fuels.

"Americans want to drive their cars. Something has to give. The industry needs that extra nudge, and the three-pronged approach is the way to go," Brown said.

"The whole idea is the free market," Brown said. "Utah has one of the best systems in the country, but no one in the government told them to put the infrastructure in."

Brown was referring to the already prevalent use of vehicle fleets owned by companies which run on natural gas. These fleets are paving the way for change, Brown said.

Geneva Steel, Coca-cola and the Newspaper Agency Corporation are all companies within the area that use natural gas for their fleets, Burnett said.

More than 2,000 vehicles from 100 different fleets run on natural gas in Utah, and Burnett said that is Questar's idea of setting the stage to get momentum for alternative fuel vehicles going on its own. The next step, he said, is to target the individual user.

"There are not many private owners yet," Burnett said.

Burnett said that Utah is one of the leading states in terms of developing an alternative fuel infrastructure, ranking after Texas and California.

Sprott said the Division of Air Quality does not favor use of one fuel over the other, but anything that reduces emissions is good.

"We're not in the business to promote one particular fuel, but there's certainly a place for alternate fuels, and we applaud Sen. Hatch's bill," he said.

In the past, only ethanol had a tax incentive attached to its purchase, and Hatch's new legislation is designed to bring all possibilities to the table.

When comparing alternative fuels, the "gasoline gallon equivalent" must be considered, Brown said. Some fuels require more than others to produce the same amount of energy. Brown said the different fuel industries will have to compete with each other, which will open up the free market and bring other options to the playing field.

Last weekend the court struck down an EPA proposal to tighten tailpipe emission standards by the year 2004. President Clinton had endorsed these standards, calling for a reduction of sulfur levels in gasoline from 300 to 30 parts per million.

Sprott said those strict standards could cost oil refineries too much to comply, and he's not sure they would have significantly reduced volatile organic compounds, but they would have helped.

"There certainly [would] be some benefits but it won't be a cure-all," he said.

Committees debate gun laws

By MICHAEL JENSEN

Three legislative committees met Wednesday at the Utah Capitol for the first of several meetings focused on gun control.

Reasons behind the committee meetings stem from the fatal shootings at the LDS Church Family History Center, KSL's Triad Center and Columbine High School in Colorado. If the meetings prove to be constructive, Gov. Mike Leavitt may call a special legislative session to discuss gun violence.

In the morning session, the Education Interim Committee discussed ways to combat violence in public schools. Several education groups and gun rights advocates took part in the meetings. Rep. Tami Rowan, member of the Education Interim Committee, said members of Utah Educational Association and PTA expressed concern over the recent outbreak of violence by calling for a ban of concealed weapons on school property.

Rep. Patrice Arent, D-South Cottonwood, presented a draft of her school safety plan that would require each school board to adopt and implement an emergency response plan to deter violence in public schools. Rowan also said that other groups felt values was the real issue.

"If we were teaching values, then students would know right from wrong and wouldn't be out harming each other, or teachers or vandalizing," Rowan said.

In the afternoon sessions, the Criminal and Judicial Committees met to discuss gun control for those suffering from mental illnesses as well as other issues. Rep. Dave Jones, D-Salt Lake, wants to draft a bill that would require more background checks for those who want to purchase guns.

Other representatives expressed a desire to act with caution. Sen. Mike Waddoups, R-Taylorsville and drafter of Utah's current concealed-weapons law, said he doesn't want the legislature to run into strict gun laws out of fear.

"I think the issue that needs to be asked is, what is the problem, and are we looking at a solution to solve that problem or just raising a bunch of issues that are totally unrelated?"

Even if someone could intercept a transmission, getting any data would be next to impossible, Harrison said. The Continuing Education server provides for 128 bit encryption — as high as federal law allows, he added.

Just getting a secured server can be hard work, Harrison said. The Continuing Education server came with the proper software, but it needed an e-mail certificate from a third party company before it could function as a secure server. Harrison had to wait for more than a week for the company to conduct background and identity checks to make sure Continuing Education was a legitimate business.

Harrison also takes pains to protect the information once it has reached the server.

"What's done with the data once it reaches the server is more important than how it gets there," Harrison said.

BYU Continuing Education keeps all of its sensitive information on its servers encrypted as well, Harrison said. That way if someone were able to hack into the server, there would be no useful information available, he said.

Credit card companies are also good at handling fraud, Harrison said.

"These three things working together are pretty darn good security measures," he said.

While Continuing Education is using a server that encrypts information sent between its server and customers' computers, the BYU Bookstore has yet to make the leap, said Josh Elledge, a Web developer for LDSWorld, the company that hosts the BYU Bookstore Web site.

But the company is hoping to make the site secure within the next few months, he said.

Knievel dares to jump Grand Canyon

GRAND CANYON WEST, Ariz. — Daredevil Robbie Knievel was thwarted in his first attempt to jump a portion of the Grand Canyon on motorcycle, but he's back.

Wind, snow, fog and near-freezing temperatures derailed the attempt in late April.

Knievel, the son of Evel Knievel, plans to try again today.

"You're talking about one of the seven wonders of the world, and I want to do it," said Knievel.

The jump on a portion of the Hualapai Indian Reservation, west of Grand Canyon National Park, will be televised live on Fox for East Coast viewers and tape-delayed for the rest of the country.

Knievel, 36, wants to break his world record of 223 feet. Failure to clear the jump will send him plunging as many as 2,500 feet down.

Dutch Cabinet collapses after veto

THE HAGUE, Netherlands — The entire Cabinet of Prime Minister Wim Kok resigned today after a bitter fight over whether to give Dutch citizens the right to vote in referendums split the ruling coalition.

The government's collapse began when a lone lawmaker in Parliament's upper chamber blocked a bill to let the Dutch public vote in referendums, a longtime goal of the Democrats 66 party, the junior member of the three-party ruling coalition.

The bill would have permitted citizens to decide certain economic and social issues through a referendum. Issues of taxation and the military would be exempt from public votes.

Democrats 66 resigned its Cabinet posts in protest after the bill failed. The Cabinet met during the day in an effort to thwart a collapse, but the talks were fruitless, and ministers of the right-leaning Liberal Party and Kok's left-of-center Labor Party also quit.

Bats add commotion to choir concert

MAGNA, Utah — Cyprus High School's end-of-the year choir performance for parents was cut short after bats flew from the auditorium rafters.

"We thought it was just one, so we cleared all the people into the foyer," said Clay Pearce, assistant principal. "When we started looking, there were three or four."

Pearce said school officials had no choice but to stop the concert Monday night and call the health department. The cancellation upset some students and parents.

"It's unfortunate. The kids have gone to a lot of work," Pearce said.

The auditorium has been sealed off until the problem is solved. Bats have not been seen in any other part of the school, Pearce said.

This is not the first time bats have inhabited the auditorium. Last year the district used foam to seal the holes where bats had been entering.

Secret agreement null and void

MANILA, Philippines — An agreement by the children of late dictator Ferdinand Marcos to share their wealth with the government will remain null and void, the Philippine Supreme Court said Wednesday.

The court nullified the secret 1993 agreement in December, ruling the government violated the constitution by promising the Marcos family civil and criminal immunity in exchange for 75 percent of their wealth. Marcos' widow, Imelda, and the couple's children are defendants in pending graft cases.

The court also said the secret agreement would give the family "a license to perpetrate fraud against the government without any liability" and set "a dangerous precedent for public accountability."

The agreement was never put into practice because the government was not satisfied the Marcoses had disclosed all assets, as required.

NATO missiles kill six Serbs

Associated Press

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — NATO missiles caused "great" damage and the deaths of six people in Serbia Wedensday, state media reported. Russia's special envoy to the Balkans called on both NATO and the Yugoslav army to stop the hostilities.

German Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder, spearheading Europe's quest for a diplomatic solution to the nearly 2-month-old allied bombing campaign, visited NATO headquarters as negotiators flew between capitals seeking unanimity to a Kosovo peace plan.

In Washington, the State Department reported hundreds of Serb soldiers deserting in Kosovo.

According to White House press secretary Joe Lockhart, "I think you're seeing, almost anyplace you look now, signs of problems for (Yugoslav President Slobodan) Milosevic.

"You have now demonstrations in three different towns where he's having to divert troops to go and try to quell these internal demonstrations. These are the mothers and parents you saw demonstrating in support of Milosevic just weeks ago."

Viktor Chernomyrdin, Russia's special envoy, flew into Belgrade - likely carrying details of the latest peace proposal meant to end the Kosovo conflict and NATO's airstrikes - and went into talks with Milosevic.

"To stop everything, for Milosevic, for all of us, it is very important to add that once more they should stop everything," Chernomydin said on arrival, "do a pause, everything, although most important is that the bombing stops, stop killing people."

The alliance said poor weather caused a temporary slowdown in its air campaign. Allied jets flew 425 sorties on the 56th day of the air war against Yugoslavia, but only 58 involved airstrikes.

The state-run Tanjug news agency reported four people died in an attack on Gnjilane, a Kosovo town 25 miles southeast of the capital, Pristina, after bombs struck a local company.

It also said 14 NATO missiles landed near the southern town of Vranje today, causing "great material damage." It was not possible to confirm the reports, which had no further details.

In addition, the Serb Media Center said NATO jets attacked a prison in Istok, northwest Kosovo, killing two inmates and injuring three people - two prisoners and a guard.

Missiles also struck an abandoned hotel in Pec, in the western part of the province, Yugoslav media said. Four employees at an adjacent brewery were reported injured.

Envoys from the G-8 group of seven leading industrial countries and Russia met today in Bonn, Germany, to work on the draft of a U.N. peace resolution.

On Tuesday, Yugoslav Foreign Ministry spokesman Nebojsa Vujovic said Belgrade was ready "to cut a deal."

But he did not explicitly say Belgrade was ready to let an armed force including NATO troops enter the southern Serb province of Kosovo to police the deal — a key stumbling block to any agreement.

ng to Burnett, we are on the verge of a "clean fuel revolution."

He said natural gas is a popular alternative fuel because there is at least a 70 year supply, 95 percent of that coming from the United States and Canada. The fuel is easily transported through pipelines and with the proposed tax breaks will be cheaper than regular gasoline.

It is also burns very clean, so cars produce low emissions, and maintenance is minimal.

Burnett said natural gas greatly reduces engine wear and can power a car 75,000 to 100,000 miles before the oil needs to be changed.

Other alternative fuels produce similar effects, and some, such as ethanol are made from grain which Sprott said could provide renewable energy.

Brown said the agricultural industry's willingness to participate in these fuel developments has been a factor in their success.

Another advantage the widespread use of alternative fuel vehicles would provide is a decreasing reliance on foreign industries for oil.

"It's not always best to be strongly reliant on a foreign market," Brown said.

"In terms of national security and economic stability producing things like natural gas is great."

Cancer: A Question of Balance

In America, half of all men and one-third of all women will develop cancer during their lifetime. Consequently, millions of people are living with cancer at the present time or have been cured of the disease.

In truth, cancer is not just one disease but a group of many related diseases. Even with all of our knowledge of molecular biology and the events in a cell that lead to the cancer process, we are not sure how far we are from the ultimate eradication of the disease. When President Richard Nixon signed the National Cancer Act, he committed the U.S. to a war on cancer. Many lives will be saved as a result of fundamental findings coming from this war and showing how cancer progresses and develops. Recent knowledge is providing the information for new therapies that will exploit the characteristic molecular abnormalities of cancer cells and allow us to make significant progress in eradicating this disease.

Dr. O'Neill was born and raised in Northern Ireland. He received a bachelor of science degree in biology with honors from the New University of Ulster at Coleraine. He obtained a research assistantship in the Biomedical Sciences Research Center, where he completed a Phd. He continued to work as a research officer and then senior research officer, and he also lectured in medical genetics. In 1992 he joined the BYU Department of Microbiology. He is currently associate director of the Brigham Young University Cancer Research Center. He recently received the College Creative Achievement Award for Research and the Karl G. Maeser Teaching Award.

A question-and-answer session will be held at 12 noon in the de Jong Concert Hall, Harris Fine Arts Center.

BYU museum examines culture

By REBECCA WHITE
rebecca@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

A BYU off-campus museum wants to make itself known to students and community members, said the museum curator.

Heather Seferovich, curator at the Museum of Peoples and Cultures, said she is anxious for students to discover what the museum has to offer.

"We are BYU's best-kept secret. We are the coolest place students can come to learn about life or if they're just bored," she said.

Until June 4, the museum will host "Common Threads — Weaving Cultural Identity," an exhibit featuring textiles from all over the world.

"Most people don't think of textiles as educational, but textiles are found in every culture and help identify many things, such as economy and gender issues. Just like modern times, textiles played a big part in ancient times," Seferovich said.

The exhibit has showcases from India, the American Southwest, South America and Polynesia. Some artifacts on display are owned by the museum, but others were collected by students and borrowed from other museums.

BYU students build the museum exhibits.

The building process provides hands-on experience and one-on-one training for students involved, Seferovich said.

"We have an army of students who choose items to show, write display copy, build the displays and give the tours," Seferovich said.

Students who visit the museum will find that a lot of thought has gone into the exhibits, said Nathan Cunningham, who has seen the exhibits.

"It's a very educational experience. The curators put a lot of time into researching what they show," said Cunningham, a senior from St. George, Wasatch County, majoring in accounting.

Seferovich said that many people from the community visit the museum, but BYU students have not yet discovered it.

She encourages the BYU community to visit the museum.

"Come learn and browse. It's a small museum that will capture your attention with video clips, a music station and the excellent showcases. I can guarantee you will learn something," she said.

The Museum of Peoples and Cultures is housed in Allen Hall on 700 N. 100 East. Visitors are welcome Monday through Friday from 9:00 a.m. until 5:00 p.m.

Textiles, baskets and other artifacts from Polynesia are on display at BYU's Museum of Peoples and Cultures until June 4. Museum employees are trying to increase student awareness of the cultural exhibits.

Services broaden on Route Y

By JOSHUA DEERE
joshua@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

The vision of a virtual university extends to BYU's faculty and students through the computer-based training programs found on Route Y.

According to Robert Allen, product manager of Information Technology Services, BYU is participating with other entities of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in a licensing agreement with a company called CBT Systems.

CBT System's site, found at www.cbtsys.com, states that the company produces interactive educational software that contains computer skill training over the Internet for a worldwide audience.

Allen said BYU has made the CBT program available for all faculty, including student employees.

"BYU is licensing the products of CBT system which has everything from basic to very technical. They have access to about 35 courses," Allen said.

"There's beginning, intermediate and advanced on most of those," he said.

The CBT courses include Microsoft programs such as Windows 98, Windows 95, Outlook 98, some Netscape programs and various others. A full list of courses available is found at ucs.byu.edu/ucs/educ/cbts/cbtcampus/cbtendlist.htm.

More information about these services is found at ucs.byu.edu/ucs/educ/index.htm.

Virtual university, reality

By JOSHUA DEERE
joshua@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

President Merrill J. Bateman's vision of making BYU a virtual university is on its way to becoming a reality.

In the Monday morning session of the BYU Annual University Conference on Aug. 24, 1998, President Bateman said, "On-campus education will be streamlined over time with the aid of technology."

He said his vision includes using the Internet to improve on-campus classes and to offer BYU courses worldwide.

"Lectures, data, class assignments, reading materials, exams and other tutorial materials will be online and on CD-ROM," President Bateman said. "Students will access online information from their homes before they arrive, from their dorms after arrival, from the library, from other buildings on campus and eventually by antennae from any location."

President Bateman said the school's goal by the end of 1998 was to have 50 courses on the Internet and more than 300 within the next five years.

He also said BYU's Division of Continuing Education, which includes all forms of off-campus courses including the independent study program, currently services around 40,000 people around the world.

In fact, Scott Howell, director of the Office of Course Development, said BYU's distance education program has the largest service area of all the nation's schools.

Dwayne Hyatt, director of Editorial and Media Productions for Continuing Education, said BYU's first online student enrolled from Japan.

He took Religion 324, the first half of the Doctrine and Covenants. Since then, BYU has added multiple online courses, Hyatt said.

He said online courses, which can be accessed at www.byu.edu/online, are currently servicing about 500 students.

But Hyatt said the semester online courses, which are designed by the courses departments, are not intended to compete with the approximately 350 classes offered through independent study.

> "In terms of quality, we like to think we're on the edge."
> —Dwayne Hyatt, director of editorial and Media Productions for Continuing Education

"We're not anticipating that those courses will replace the independent study courses, but that they will be a supplement," Hyatt said.

Howell, said the online courses are different because they must be completed within a normal semester like an on-campus course, whereas independent study course students have a full year to complete the course.

Hyatt said there are many advantages to an online course, including multiple reviews and tests with immediate scoring and feedback on answers.

"This breaks some log jams that have existed for a long time," Hyatt said. "You can take those now and answer the last question and hit return and see the scores for your test."

Lab animals create controversy

By REBECCA WHITE
rebecca@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Despite the progress that has been made with animal research, some animal rights activists are arguing for other alternatives.

Jay Behrman, a continuing education professor at the University of Utah, said animal research doesn't respect the rights of animals.

"I would not say that animal research does not provide benefits, but human research would provide even more benefits," Behrman said. "We don't believe that it is moral to test products on humans so we have forgone the benefits and slowed down science."

Some BYU students agree.

"Although a lot of good has come from it, I don't support it," said Brandon Bonham, a senior from Draper, Salt Lake County, majoring in accounting.

However, many BYU students do not share this attitude, said Donovan Fleming, a BYU psychology professor.

Julie Foreman, a freshman from San Diego, Calif., majoring in history, said, "I think animal research is fine. If it's going to help people live, it's great. If someone just wants to hurt an animal, then that's wrong."

"At this point, animals still provide a critical link to our understanding of animal and human functions that cannot be replicated by computer models," said Dave Salyer, a psychology graduate student from Provo.

Scientists are finding alternative methods to animal research.

"These methods cannot replace all animal use. However, the more sophisticated methods can help reduce the need for animals in scientific inquiry," Fleming said.

Although Fleming acknowledged that animal activists have a point, he said, "You can't take someone's child or an activist and fill him full of drugs just to see if they work."

"It sends a message that the university cares about its employees' health," he said.

Assistant International Student Advisor Ted Okawa said he has never missed a Fun Walk. Okawa, who is from Hawaii, spent 12 years in the Army where his unit would run several times a week in formation. He said this experience is similar to the Fun Walk at BYU.

"When you get out and do physical excerise together, it brings unity as well as physical health," Okawa said.

Hardy said he hopes people who participate in the walk will realize how nice it is to be active and that it will encourage them to make positive changes in their lifestyle.

Okawa said the only changes he would recommend for the Wellness Program is that it should have a walk every month instead of four times a year.

"When your employees are in good physical condition, they perform better and they aren't sick as often," he said.

Hardy said he would like to encourage the university personnel to come out and participate Friday.

Faculty and students can register for the free Fun Walk until 11:45 a.m. Friday. There will be prizes and refreshments afterwards.

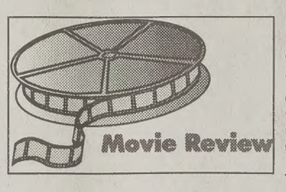
Film features `trekkies' in actio

Associated Press

It seemed suspicious from the start: Paramount Pictures, corporate keeper of the ever-revered "Star Trek" flame, producing a documentary about "Trek" fans? Surely this had all the makings of self-congratulatory pablum.

Not at all. The deadpan, frequently hilarious documentary called "Trekkies" focuses on a modern American obsession and leaves no fan unskewered. And even if the jabs are all gentle and good-natured, a message still emerges: Be afraid. Be very afraid. There is the Whitewater juror who came to court dressed as a Starfleet officer. There is the Orlando, Fla., dentist whose entire office is decorated in a "Star Trek" motif, right down to the uniformed dental assistants. There is the guy who legally changed his name to James T. Kirk and the team of scholars translating the Bible and the "Gilligan's Island" theme song into Klingon.

But wait — there's more. The tricorder-wearing poodle. The guy who's altered his SUV into a shuttle craft. The woman so obsessed with "Trek" actor Brent Spiner that she takes "Brent breaks" to think about him. The fan who stood up at a convention and asked an actor: "What's it like to be beamed up?"



"Even now, I still have an ongoing process of trying to grasp all this," says Leonard "Spock" Nimoy. Director Roger Nygard commissioned actress Denise Crosby (Tasha Yar of the first season of "Star Trek: The Next Generation") to be an investigative reporter of sorts.

He sent her to conventions and on the trail of hard-core fans, and her cachet as a part of the "Trek" phenomenon gave her the entree and ability to solicit more candid responses from her quarry. Nygard and Crosby let the fans talk — and talk and talk. It's a conscious tactic, allowing them to outline their own obsession without directly poking fun. What's more, "Trekkies" never loses sight of the basic honorable traits that drive the phenomenon: curiosity about the world, conviction that the future is bright, and an imperative to treat others well no matter how alien they seem.

Granted, most of those chronicled in "Trekkies" belong to the fringe of "Star Trek" fandom. It's the same story when TV covers "Trek" conventions: The camera guy heads straight for the growling Klingon and the geeky Vulcan with the pointy ears; it makes for good video. But do you ever see the normally dressed people who are just plain interested? Rarely.

That's not the point of "Trekkies," though. Rather, as the production notes say, it's this: "People are at their funniest — often showing their most bewildering and endearing humanity — when they are in the midst of their most obsessive behavior."

What caused this wave of adulation? What was it about "Star Trek" that got under people's skin? Part of it was the New Frontier mentality of the 1960s, a time when "to b where no man has gone bef an idea that still held poten age of moon shots.

Pianist will bring music to campus

By TARA D. MCKINNEY

Jon Schmidt, renowned composer, pianist and entertainer, will perform Friday and Saturday in the de Jong Concert Hall.

"I love playing the de Jong Concert Hall," Schmidt said. "It's a great hall, great piano; it's going to be a great time."

Schmidt graduated in 1984 from Highland High School in Salt Lake City. After his graduation, he attended the University of Utah.

Schmidt said that when began presenting concerts, he wanted to play music that would appeal to teenagers. He said he later began compose and perform more well-rounded music.

"Growing up in the `80s, there was great music on the radio ... everybody was experimenting with different textures," Schmidt said.

Schmidt said his main inspiration for his music was Manheim Steamroller, which he said he believes is the origin of the first classically-based new age music. Schmidt said he was also inspired by Howard Jones, Chicago, Men at Work and the Thompson Twins.

Schmidt said his German immigrant father introduced him to the music of Mozart, Bach and Beethoven.

Schmidt's agent, Craig Coleby, said at times Schmidt plays soft reflective music with a style comparative to Yanni's. Then, suddenly, Schmidt throws himself under the keyboard and plays ragtime while lying on his back with his hands crossed.

"When you see a movie, the thing that makes it good is that it made you laugh and it made you cry. I try to model that with my music," Schmidt said.

Schmidt has composed and produced four albums and two piano books. With a new album, concerts and more piano books on the way, Schmidt said he feels like he's doing a million things at once.

This weekend's performance will be Schmidt's second at BYU. His concerts last year at Kingsbury Hall and Abravanel Hall both sold out. Schmidt's performances have been attended by Jon M. Huntsman Jr., president of Huntsman Chemical, and visiting dignitaries of the Olympic Bid Committee.

According to a news release, Kurt Bestor, Emmy Award-winning composer, arranger and recording artist, has been impressed by Schmidt's music.

"During the past few years, I've watched and listened as John Schmidt has become a permanent fixture in the growing `contemporary instrument' genre. His performances always display a rare sincerity and freshness to appreciative audiences that are growing larger and larger," Bestor said in the release.

The concert begins at 7:30 p.m. with tickets on sale in the Harris Fine Arts Center box office. Tickets are $7 for students with I.D. and $10 for the general public. For tickets and more information call 378-4322.

Fanatics buy 'Star Wars' tickets

By YUNG LY
yung@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

The moment has come. The first showing of "Star Wars Episode I: The Phantom Menace" was at 12:01 a.m. Wednesday.

Excitement and anticipation were on the faces of the people waiting in line to see the first showing.

"I grew up with Star Wars, and it's a tradition with my family," said Keri Madsen, 21, a junior from Alpine, majoring in elementary education. Madsen admits to being a fanatic about "Star Wars" since she waited in line for a week and half to buy tickets.

Although Madsen doesn't know if "The Phantom Menace" will be good, she is still eager to watch it. "I don't know if it'll meet to my expectations, but I think it'll grow on me," Madsen said.

One of the first people in line for the 12:01 a.m. showing was David Jorgensen.

Jorgensen waited in line at 5 p.m. for the 12:01 a.m. showing.

"It's going to be better than Titanic," said Jorgensen, a 22 year-old UVSC student from Provo.

A few people were dressed up for the movie, like Audra Turman, who was dressed up as a Jedi.

"It's fun, and it's a way to get hyped up about it," said Turman, a 19 year-old junior from Williamsburg, Va., majoring in Psychology.

Although Turman waited in line for eight days to buy the tickets, she had a lot of fun doing it.

"I've enjoyed the experience, and I met a lot of people doing it," said Turman.

Although not a lot of people were dressed up for the movie, "Star Wars" fanatics were still present. Three sisters, Jennie, Mandie and Dionne Robinson from Dugway, brought "Star Wars" paraphernalia such as a "Star Wars" Monopoly game, soda cans that have pictures of "Star Wars" and "Star Wars" Farley Fruit snacks.

One of the Robinson sisters will be mailing a movie ticket to a missionary.

"I'm going to send a ticket to a missionary because he isn't here to see it," said Mandi Robinson.

Many people will be watching the movie more than once. Some said they'll watch it at least twice, and others like the Robinson sisters will watch it four or five times.

Since many people camped out hours, days, weeks and a month ahead of time to buy these wanted tickets you would think there wouldn't be anyone roaming around offering to buy a ti,cket more than $6.50.

Unfortunately Jimmy Kester didn't have enough time to wait in line and was willing to pay three times more than the original price to see it at 12:01 a.m.

"I'm willing to pay $25 to see it," said Kester a 19 year-old sophomore from Provo majoring in English. Whether or not "The Phantom Menace" will turn out to be good, it's definitely interesting to see what people will do for a movie.

BYU Coach LaVell Edwards is at practice with the Cougars. Edwards spoke out for a resolution to Orem's proposed Cascade Golf Course condemnation.

As an avid golfer and former golf coach, Edwards said he understands the importance of a full-regulation golf course.

"If the course is not able to continue with its current par-35 regulation status, it will likely have a significant negative impact on Cascade's business."

Edwards' concerns also focus on school athletes and community golfers.

He said junior high and high school athletes and many other golfers in the community who will no longer have a regulation course in Orem on which to compete will also be affected.

This letter and other efforts made by the community appeared to have an effect on the City Council vote.

On Tuesday night, about 100 residents watched as council members voted 4-2 to have city staff prepare a resolution outlining a compromise.

New school may not be ready by fall

By MELISSA ANDERSON
melissa@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

The new elementary school under construction west of the Cascade Golf Course may not be ready to open by the beginning of the school year, which could mean double sessions for students.

Michael Robinson, Alpine School District's public information officer, said the school is scheduled to be done by fall, but may not open until October.

> "It's a miracle to open the school this year. The bond was just passed last year."
> —Michael Robinson, Alpine School District's public information officer

If the school, known as Foothill Elementary School, doesn't open until October, students will attend in double sessions.

"If someone argues against double sessions they are arguing against opening the school," Robinson said.

"It's a miracle to open the school this year. The bond was just passed last year."

The 525 students who will attend Foothill Elementary would share Cascade Elementary School by attending different sessions.

Melanie Edmunds, Parent Teacher Association president for Foothill Elementary, said the two schools would function separately, but be in the same building

Cascade Elementary students would attend school from 7:45 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Foothill Elementary students would attend school from 1 p.m. to 5:45 p.m.

Edmunds expressed concern for the children attending the late session.

"I am concerned for the kindergarten students who will attend school from one to three. They will be exhausted," Edmunds said.

Another concern is the lack of time for after school activities.

Since most after school lessons and activities take place between 3 p.m. and 5 p.m. students and parents will have to rearrange time schedules.

"I know many piano teachers in the area can teach in the morning, but the late session places a burden on team sports. You can't change the time of those activities," Edmunds said.

Aleen Ure, the new principal of Foothill Elementary said, "I look at the double sessions as a great adventure. We just have to structure the kids and move them along academically,".

"Art history degrees are great in terms of art history knowledge, but internships are probably the most important thing," Bell said. "Basically, you're volunteering your time, learning how things work."

Bell said an internship was important in furthering her career. She also said she liked the idea of leaving the country and being able to travel.

Katherine White, a sophomore from Hyde Park, Cache County, majoring in sociology, is using her internship opportunity to go to Africa and work with lower-income families. She is traveling with a BYU group.

"I'm very excited about this. I really want to see the stuff I've learned in class be put into action," White said.

Some professors also agree internships are beneficial. Hans-Wilhelm Kelling, director of internships in the Humanities Department, said internships are important for two reasons.

"One, students need them to gain experience in their proposed field and secondly to improve their language proficiency," he said.

In the Humanities Department, many of the internships are offered overseas. This incorporates the desire to travel and see new places with the experience, Kelling said.

In some departments, such as the Communications Department, internships are required for graduation. An office has been specially designated to help students find internships that are interesting and beneficial.

"The involvement that an internship offers brings the benefit of comprehension, and comprehension is invaluable in the workforce," Kelling said.

Family science courses try to improve marriages

By REBECCA WHITE
rebecca@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

At a university where marriage and family are emphasized, some students shun the idea of taking a family science course while others jump for joy.

"I'm not interested in taking those types of courses. I'm a do-it-yourself kind of person and I don't want to take a class on how to raise my family," said Jeff Dalby, a senior from Las Vegas, Nev., majoring in geographical information systems.

Jeanne Lightbourn, a senior from Simi Valley, Calif. majoring in elementary education and early childhood education, said, "I've always wanted to take these courses because knowing the development of a child makes a big difference in how you as a parent should act."

Kathleen Bahr, a professor of family sciences, said students who take these classes are predominantly family science majors, but there is a mix of students from all across campus.

"I want to take these classes to learn more about family values and what I need to teach my family in the future. Families are important and if we can learn as much as possible about raising children, our families will be strengthened in the last day," said Robert Grimm, a freshman from Burnsville, Minn., majoring in business management and international finance.

The classes in the Family Sciences Department are offered to help students complete a major, but Bahr said they are also designed to benefit society.

"Students taking these classes can learn to live as better family members," Bahr said.

The team's recent success has pushed it to a No. 10 and No. 15 ranking in the national polls and the top spot in its district.

BYU head coach Bruce Brockbank said he is glad the team is "peaking at the right time."

He said he is looking forward to the regional tournament in Tucson and watching his team compete.

"We will need to be at the top of our game because there are so many good teams in the field, but we certainly have the talent to win the tournament," Brockbank said.

The Cougars will be competing against top-five teams UNLV (No. 2) and Arizona State (No. 5) as well as 11 other ranked teams.

A total of 18 teams will compete in the par 72, 54-hole tournament, with half of the teams advancing to the national tournament.

BYU will be led by Andy Miller, who is ranked 24th in the nation and is a two-time All-American.

He will be supported by Billy Harvey (No. 46), freshman standout Manuel Merizalde (No. 71) and Scott Miller (No. 78).

Merizalde recently took first-place individual honors at the WAC championship tournament.

Prior to each tournament, the players compete against each other for playing spots.

"Each week they have to solidify their position," Brockbank said. "They're a hard-working group this year."

Should BYU finish in the top nine, it will advance to the NCAA Championship in Chaska, Minn., something they have not done since the 1992-93 season. .

Red Wings look for answers after lo

Avalanche buries Detroit's hopes of becoming the next NHL dynasty

Associated Press

One moment they looked like the old Red Wings, but the moment after that, they just looked old. Another dynasty-in-the-making has ended with a thud.

Hockey is played too fast to see a team crumble over the span of a single game. Go back and look at freeze frames from Colorado's 5-2 series-clinching win Tuesday night in Detroit and it's tough to see how Hockeytown's future can be nearly as bright as its immediate past.

The last two years running, the Red Wings ended the season by drinking from the Stanley Cup.

The two seasons before that, they could take some comfort in knowing they were beaten by the eventual champions, the Avalanche, in the Western Conference finals in 1996, and the New Jersey Devils in the Stanley Cup finals in 1995.

Avalanche vs. Red Wings is among the best rivalries in sports, so there is no shame in losing.

On the other hand, Detroit raised expectations by adding four big names to the roster just ahead of the trading deadline, then sweeping Anaheim to open the playoffs.

And that may have been why the crash-and-burn nature of the second-round loss — the Red Wings dropped four straight after winning the first two — left everybody in the locker room wondering what's next.

"I hate to see the Cup going someplace else this year," Detroit's Brendan Shanahan said. "That's going to be the hardest part."

Red Wings fans might have to get used to it.

Their last night in contention for a third straight Cup got off to a terrible start, then turned, in the span of just 29 seconds, into something promising.

Late in the second period, Detroit scored two quick goals to turn a 4-0 lead into 4-2 and slow Colorado's momentum from an avalanche to a crawl. And then, with 6 1/2 minutes left in the game, the night turned sour for good.

Colorado's Peter Forsberg picked up the puck near center ice and broke toward Chris Osgood in the Detroit net. The only Red Wing with any chance of catching him was center Igor Larionov, who was already a teen-age prospect in the old Soviet hockey machine when Forsberg was born.

> "I hate to see the cup going someplace else this year."
> — Brendan Shanahan, Detroit hockey player

In a second, the age difference — 13 years — was apparent. Larionov clutched, grabbed and poked Forsberg, but lost contact with him soon enough.

A second later, Forsberg deked Osgood on the backhand side, pulled the puck back to his forehand and deposited both the puck and himself into the net.

It was Forsberg's second goal of the night and there was a certain symmetry to his being the hero, because he was the goat of the first two games.

The whole series, in fact, was punctuated by mood swings. Detroit won two on Colorado's ice. Forsberg got himself tossed from Game 1 for a vicious check on Shanahan from behind, leaving his shorthanded teammates to get beat in overtime.

The Red Wings won Game 2 in regulation when Bill Ranford, their backup netminder, posted a shutout and played the way everybody expected Colorado's Patrick Roy would.

Then, as if on cue, the two switched roles.

Roy began playing like the best playoff goalie ever. Ranford answered questions about why he was filling in for the injured Osgood by playing like a backup.

Colorado won two in Detroit and a third at home. In the deciding game Tuesday night, Roy was unyielding early and then, after the two Detroit scores got the crowd at Joe Louis back to its throaty best, solid enough to quiet the joint down.

In a nice touch, the crowd got back on its feet for the final minute to pay tribute to the team and the coach, Scotty Bowman, for a great run before heading for the exits.

Whether they will return next fall to find a team nearly this competitive is anyone's guess. General m Holland made some bol get the Red Wings back race at the end of Marc for Ranford, Chris C Samuelsson and Wendel just had a whole lot of things ng at the same time," Portland Mike Dunleavy said. "Once we at momentum we had built up, re vulnerable, and the Jazz ow to take advantage of that." 2 in the series is Thursday t the Delta Center. Portland's nthony called it "a must-win for us, because Utah is too o give a two-game lead."

T LAKE CITY — Before the nd Trail Blazers played the fourth quarter in NBA history, Western Conference semifinal against the Jazz was going ing to plan.

actice Wednesday morning, the s weren't sure how much they change their approach. After ost everything worked — that l nothing did.

ard to pinpoint a turning point said Damon Stoudamire, who our turnovers and missed two n the fourth. "When you miss your 16 shots like we did, you're not going to win any game."

Portland scored five fourth-quarter points, the fewest in any fourth quarter since the inception of the shot clock and the fewest in any quarter of any playoff game. The Blazers unanimously admitted they had failed their first playoff gut check.

"It kind of breaks your spirits a little bit when that happens at the end of a game," forward Brian Grant said. "We've just got to put it behind us, because it can't do us any good now, only harm."

After averaging 19 points and nine rebounds per game during Portland's first-round sweep of Phoenix, Grant had another solid game. He played just 31 minutes before fouling out, but got 19 points on 8-of-13 shooting and six rebounds.

"I don't give any fault to the referees, because they're part of the game," Grant said. "We did a lot of good things, but mistakes down the stretch tend to negate all that good that you did."

For the Jazz, it was their fourth straight game decided in the final minute. In the previous two, the Sacramento Kings pushed Utah to the brink of playoff elimination before letting the Jazz back in with missed shots and bad defense.

"We don't beat ourselves, and sometimes in the playoffs, that's the difference," Malone said. "We haven't played that well yet in the postseason, but we don't get caught up in the pressures ... of a high-intensity situation like the playoffs. We just take what they give us, and sometimes they'll give you the game if you let them."

Utah's Bryon Russell, left, gets slammed to the floor by Portland's Rasheed Wallace during fourth-quarter action of Game 1 between the Trail Blazers and Jazz. Wallace was called for a flagrant foul.

The Jazz have beaten the Blazers three straight times going back to the regular season. Utah coach Jerry Sloan wanted to keep his team focused on Portland's three solid quarters of play in Game 1.

"It appeared they knew our plays better than we did sometimes," Sloan said. "They were much more lively than us, and we were fortunate that their open shots stopped going down. That was probably the only reason we won."

Sloan praised forward Bryon Russell for his 18-point, seven-rebound performance. Russell said his sprained ankle is only 75 percent healed, but he decisively won his matchup with Rasheed Wallace, who was 3-of-8 from the field and had just three rebounds.

Russell, who excels both in slashing to the basket and hitting the spot-up jumper, plays the kind of free-flowing game the Blazers enjoy. Though he is several inches shorter than Wallace, Russell's quickness counted more on Tuesday night.

"Bryon gave us the effort we need at that spot. With all their quality big men, Bryon has to have a huge series for us to be successful," Sloan said.

With 10:35 left in the fourth quarter of Game 1 and the Blazers clinging to a 78-74 lead, Wallace slammed Russell to the floor while defending a layup attempt. The resulting flagrant and technical fouls against Wallace allowed the Jazz to tie the game, and they never trailed again.

"That play was no big thing to me, because I knew it was a bogus call," Wallace said. "That call wasn't the thing that started us playing bad, either. I don't know what did that."

Y basketball signs guards

By DAVE COLLIER

The BYU basketball team is preparing to dribble past the competition and improve its record next season with the help of exciting new recruits and a full squad of returning missionaries.

Terrell Lyday, a two-time All-Central Valley Conference guard at Fresno City College, and Shawn Opunui, widely regarded as the top high school point guard in Utah, are the newest members of the BYU basketball team. Both have signed letters of intent to play under head coach Steve Cleveland.

The team will look to see an immediate impact from the 6-foot-3, 185-pound combination guard Lyday, Cleveland said.

The 5-foot-10, 170-pound point guard Opunui, on the other hand, has decided to serve an LDS mission before playing for BYU.

Opunui had planned to play one season with the team and then leave next spring to serve his mission, but recently changed his mind and will leave in the fall.

Lyday will make the jump to Division I NCAA basketball from his local community college in Fresno, Calif.

"Terrell is an athletic shooter who can take it to the basket strong," Cleveland said. "He will see a lot of playing time next year."

The Rams will miss their top defender and leading scorer, said Fresno head coach Denny Aye.

"Terrell knows how to score off the dribble and has great dunking ability. He's just an exciting player," Aye said. "BYU got a good athlete and a classy young player."

Lyday said he's looking forward to contributing to BYU's offense next season.

"One thing I like to do is put points on the board," he said.

Lyday averaged 17.5 points, 3.7 rebounds, and 2.7 assists, while guiding the team to a 32-4 record and the conference title in 1999. He also shot 42 percent from behind the arc, making 102 three pointers on the year.

BYU will welcome home five return missionaries for the 2000-01 season.

Eric Nielsen, a 6-foot-8 center/forward and 6-foot-1 guard Matt Montague, will return to the team from foreign missions after putting up solid numbers in the 1996-97 season.

"This is the first time since I've been here that we haven't had to completely start over," Cleveland said. "We have a core of players that will return with some experience."

The team has planned a European tour from June 21-July 4 that will take it to England and Spain.

The NCAA will allow the team to practice together for two weeks to prepare for the tour. This will be an excellent opportunity for the team to play seven games together and to gel before the season begins, Cleveland said.

Other returning missionaries to watch for next season include 7-foot center Dan Howard, 6-foot-5 forward Morgan Smith, and 6-foot-4 guard Jordan Archibald.

Provo to build new rec. center

By SARA GARCIA AND EMILY VOISIN

Provo City is planning to build a new recreational center. The Provo Parks and Recreation Office said the project is already under way.

"The mayor is very supportive of this proposal," said Roger Thomas, director of Provo Parks and Recreation.

Thomas also said there are still a few hurdles to be reviewed, but a new recreational center has been on the city's plan for many years. Thomas said the project is now in the embryo stage.

Some of those hurdles include approval from the Provo City Council, as well as necessary funding. Thomas said Mayor Lewis Billings is committed to not raising taxes to build the new facility.

The Provo community has been in need of a new recreational facility for quite some time, Thomas said.

"This one is pretty old and hammered," said Robyn McMillen, a lifeguard at the 25-year-old Provo Recreation Center.

"A lot of people go to Orem Rec, and then come here and they don't come back," McMillen said. "Provo residents are choosing to travel the extra miles to Orem's newer facility. A new rec center will bring in better business for Provo."

Robin Friedbaum, a Provo resident and a mother of four, said she prefers Orem's recreational center over Provo's because it offers better facilities.

"The rec center in Orem is really nice," Friedbaum said. She says she likes the convenience of a facility that is near, but prefers Orem's rec center because it is cleaner and nicer.

"I'm sure we'll come up with a dream list of everything we would love to see, but when we start putting dollars and cents to all of those items, we may need to scale back," Thomas said. He added that the most important thing is to first see what the community needs.

Some Provo High School students said they are excited to know that the current recreational center will belong exclusively to the high school when the new recreational center is built.

"It will be nice to no longer have to share with the community," said Amy Ollerton, a Provo High School freshman. Ollerton said that students have to pay to use the facility after school hours, whereas many other high schools don't charge a fee.

The Parks and Recreation Office said they hope to have the new facility up and running by the fall of 2001. Thomas said the design phase will take approximately 9 to 12 months, and construction will take about 12 to 15 months. "It is a quick time frame, but it won't be too quick. We want a product that the citizens deserve today, as well as for the next 50 years," Thomas said.

Mexico discusses immigration

Associated Press

For the first time during his historic trip to California, Mexican President Ernesto Zedillo raised immigration as a major issue facing both sides of the border.

"Of course we have many problems," Zedillo said during a 30-minute speech Tuesday night. "We have to talk about migration. We have to talk about the everyday problems at our common border. We have to talk about security problems. We have to talk about so many issues."

Zedillo, who did not elaborate on specific problems, emphasized that solutions could be found only if California and Mexico work together.

Both sides agreed the Mexican president's visit marked the start of a new era of goodwill.

"We are committed to healing the wounds of the past," Gov. Gray Davis said before introducing Zedillo in San Francisco. "God made us neighbors for a reason. He wants us to get along. We have a common destiny. When Mexico prospers, America prospers."

Zedillo's speech to about 800 members of the Commonwealth Club and World Affairs Council came hours after he became the first Mexican president to address the California Legislature. It also was the first time Zedillo has visited San Francisco.

His three-day trip to California reciprocates a trip Davis took to Mexico City in February. Zedillo arrived in Los Angeles at noon today and will spend Thursday in San Diego before returning home.

While Mexico-California trade has soared this decade, official relations have withered as California voters approved ballot measures meant to curb illegal immigration and dismantle state affirmative action.

Mexican distrust of California grew with the 1994 passage of Proposition 187, which sought to bar illegal immigrants from receiving most state services, including education. A federal court blocked the measure, but Davis' predecessor, Gov. Pete Wilson, appealed.

Davis opposes the initiative, but rather than drop the appeal when he had the chance last month, he sent the matter to a federal mediator.

> "The days of looking toward Mexico and seeing only problems are over."
> — Lt. Gov. Cruz Bustamante

"I see what he just did as something conducive to his original commitment," Zedillo said when asked in Sacramento about Davis' decision. "I trust Governor Davis and I hope and trust and know that in the end there will be a good solution regarding this issue."

Lt. Gov. Cruz Bustamante, a Mexican-American who publicly denounced Davis' decision, said California and Mexico are ringing in "a new spirit of goodwill."

"The days of looking toward Mexico and seeing only problems are over," Bustamante said.

In his speech at the state Capitol, Zedillo sought to reassure Californians that his country is rebuilding its economy, strengthening democracy, reforming its judicial system and cleaning up its environment.

He acknowledged that poverty in Mexico, which has driven countless Mexicans to California and has led to immigration disputes, is his nation's biggest challenge, but said he is fighting the problem.

"Mexico is on the right path," he said.

Outside the Capitol, dozens protested army human rights abuses in Chiapas and alleged U.S. weapons sales to Mexico and demanded absentee voting rights for Mexicans living abroad.

In an afternoon speech to business groups - this one in English - Zedillo again sought to polish Mexico's image in the eyes of Californians.

"Mexico is a great country, but in the 21st century Mexico will be a better country, and I am sure about that, because we Mexicans are working very hard," he said, drawing applause.

Davis and Zedillo announced programs that will accelerate response to hazard materials emergencies along the border, control agricultural pests and develop an Internet link between universities in California and Mexico to enhance research.

Utah Pioneers visit Provo

By PAUL HATCH

Provo residents will get a taste of pioneer life this Saturday.

As part of the Provo Sesquicentennial celebration, the public can visit the Provo Pioneer Village at 500 N. 500 West. The village is staffed by volunteers dressed as pioneers and features live demonstrations of pioneer life. The village is open every Saturday until July 24 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Adam Diehl, a village volunteer, said interacting with the visitors and telling them stories helps them learn about their heritage.

"Everybody knows about Provo's history, but history really comes alive when you see it demonstrated," Diehl said.

The village is part of the Provo Historic Live tour. Diehl said there are four stops on the tour: the Brigham Young Academy, the Tabernacle, St. Francis Catholic church and the Pioneer Village. He said at each stop individuals dressed as historical Provo figures teach the significance of the site.

"We're trying to make a personal connection with people's past," Diehl said.

Sandy Henderson, a Sesquicentennial Celebration chair, said the village is owned and operated by the Sons of Utah Pioneers. She said 50 years ago they brought original pioneer cabins from the area to the park and made the village.

"The actors are showing what life was like in a pioneer village," Henderson said.

The village will feature a blacksmith shop, homes of early pioneers and a one room school house. There's even a teacher that teaches the Deseret alphabet, she said.

Laurie Ann Davis, a volunteer at the village, comes with her family each week to participate. She said she enjoys being a pioneer.

"I think the highlight is learning how the pioneers did this kind of stuff," Davis said.

Although this is the first year Davis has participated in the village, she said she wants to do it as long as she can.

The Provo School District has also visited the pioneer village. The director of elementary education for Provo school district, Kathy Luke, is pleased with the pioneer village from an educational perspective.

"(The students) have a chance to see a more realistic presentation," Luke said.

She said that in addition to the village's teaching aspects, its atmosphere is fun for the students.

Mary Ellen Getts, another village volunteer, said the participants make the village more enjoyable.

"It's kind of neat to make the village come alive instead of just houses and buildings that people look at. It makes it a lot more interesting," Getts said.

Getts said she would like to see more Provo residents come to the village because it is so close. She said visiting wouldn't take a lot of time out of a Saturday.

"People in Provo don't have to go clear up to Salt Lake. They can come right here and spend a half hour and then just go home," she said.

Volunteer Julie Proud said the village creates an image in people's minds of how the pioneers lived.

"A lot of people are fascinated with it because they've read it in books, but you can't picture the living history in a book," she said.

Proud said part of learning the pioneer history is realizing their lives were hard. She said unlike today the pioneers had to start everything from the beginning.

"I try to teach the children as they come in there's nothing wrong with hard. Just because it's hard doesn't mean it's bad — hard is really very wonderful," Proud said.

Lightrail worries SLC vendors

By CHANTELLE KOMM

NewsNet Staff Writer

Although construction is transforming downtown Salt Lake City in preparation for the Olympics, it may be hurting some retailers.

A study published by the University of Utah reports retail sales have dropped 15 percent in the downtown core as shopping has moved to the suburbs.

"People just don't come downtown because they don't want to fight traffic compounded by road closures and no parking," said Bart Stringham, president of Utah Woolen Mills.

Stringham and others blame construction, especially lightrail construction, for the customer decline.

Mayor Deedee Corradini says businesses need patience.

"Once lightrail is up and running it will be fabulous for business. In other cities that have also adopted lightrail businesses have boomed. They love being on the lightrail line," Corradini said.

But Stingham, president of Utah Woolen Mills, said he's sick of hearing political promises.

"The city promised after construction is done business will boom, but what are we supposed to do in the meantime? They promised us the project would only take six weeks. But now it's been over six months," Stringham said.

Some business owners said they think patience may be too much to ask for if they aren't getting any customers in the store. A University of Utah study reported that gross retail sales are down 15 percent in the downtown core.

Stringham and other local business owners met last night to discuss how to stop more light rail construction. He said the east-west connector is "not a done deal" and hopes to stop it.

Stringham said he knows many businesses have closed because of light rail construction.

"We've been here for 93 years. We have a faithful customer base, but many other businesses have gone under" Stringham said.

But Bob Farrington, executive of the Downtown Alliance, a non-profit organization promoting the well-being of business and culture downtown disagrees.

Farrington said in the last six months, only two businesses out of 400 he dealt with in one block of lightrail construction closed. He also said this figure is not any different from any other six month period, with or without construction.

"What we are seeing is a shift from traditional retail to experience-based retail like restaurants, entertainment and specialty shops," Farrington said.

Farrington also said while retail sales are down, food and drink sales and entertainment sales are up. In fact, the U of U study shows sales for food and drink are up 60 percent since 1987.

Farrington said downtown has a great future because its increasing diversity of shops and venues is attracting more people.

"Salt Lake is becoming a bigger city, and downtown needs to change. It has the largest retail concentration, and that won't change. What will change is the nature of the retail," Farrington said.

Farrington said what is happening downtown is happening in most cities.

"Downtown cities are promoting experience-based shopping instead of regular Wall-Mart retail style. This is what will maintain a healthy, vibrant downtown core," Farrington said.

Media blamed for violence

By ANDREW A. ADAMS
andrew@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

President Clinton's speech to Hollywood over the weekend urging media executives to reconsider violent content in their productions doesn't address the real issue, some experts said.

Media analysts vary, however, in their evaluations of the effectiveness of Clinton's approach to the issue of violence in society.

George Gerbner, Bell Atlantic professor of telecommunications at Temple University, is best known for his research of the effects of violence in television on society. Gerbner said violence in the media is actually not the point.

"The situation becomes a vicious circle," Gerbner said. "Violence is portrayed in the media, which leads to public insecurity, which leads to repression, which leads to more police, and, eventually, which leads to an explosion."

Gerbner said the last time there was an 'explosion' in America, it was with Watts in the 1960s. Gerbner said the United States is building up to another explosion.

"Violence in the media has reached epidemic proportions," Gerbner said.

Nancy Signorielli, author of "Growing up with Television, The Images and Lessons of Violence" and professor of communications at the University of Delaware, said there are no simple answers to the question of violence in the media.

Signorielli said her research of TV violence throughout the 1990s found violent acts in roughly 60 to 70 percent of prime time programs. She also found that violence occurs at the rate of about four acts per program.

TV violence is often presented in place of more creative means as a way to solve problems, Signorielli says.

"Even more important, television rarely shows the real consequences of violence — hurting and killing on TV are relatively antiseptic," Signorielli said.

He also agrees with Gerbner's notion of the mean world syndrome — the idea that heavy viewing of violence is related to increased feelings of alienation and doom.

"While I would not advocate that television become violence-free, there is a need for television to eliminate, or at least reduce, gratuitous violent representations," Signorielli said.

Janette Muir, C-SPAN consultant and assistant professor of communications at George Mason University, said there is political motivation behind Clinton's media violence emphasis.

"I don't think Hollywood is going to temper its violent content," Muir said.

Muir also said that while research on the issue is inconclusive, violence in society cannot be attributed to one single factor. Muir said the better alternative to checking media violence lies elsewhere.

"What has to happen is parents have to get more involved," Muir said. "Parents need to take a more active role in monitoring what their children are watching."

Robert R. Butterworth, child psychologist with International Trauma Associates in Los Angeles, said in a news release that the media do not create violent children.

"Dysfunctional parenting, children with little guilt and high amounts of narcissism, inability to handle anger, accessibility to firearms with little parental supervision is key," Butterworth said. "Attacking the media is just an ineffective smoke screen."

Troy Smith, visiting associate professor of political science at BYU, said he thinks violence in the media is a symptom of the problem.

"The underlying question is, what is the cause," Smith said. "Some say it is guns. Others say it is culture. As a symptom of the culture, people point to Hollywood."

Smith noted that some scholars have said violence in Hollywood has a minimal effect on society, but contributes to those with violent tendencies.

However, Smith said the government may traditionally have more of a right to regulate media and the press than commonly thought. Smith recited a discussion between Abigail Adams, and Thomas Jefferson on press regulation.

"Abigail Adams made the point that if there are no limits placed on the press, it can inhibit other freedoms and rights," Smith said. "Jefferson said he understood that, but responded that he thought it was the state's responsibility to regulate, not the federal government's."

"We often forget the second part of what Jefferson said and just think that government can't regulate the press at all," he said.

Smith said Clinton always seems to go the third way — a popular balance in assigning blame and encouraging reform.
